

Toy rating system for Parents of Children with Disabilities

Written by geri
Tuesday, 28 November 2006

The Holiday Season is upon us and toy-shopping can be daunting for family members searching for a perfect toy to give a child with a disability. Not only do they want a toy that will bring joy to their child, they need to find toys that will accommodate special needs. Enter Ableplay.org, a toy rating system and Website that provides comprehensive information for parents, special educators, therapist and others looking for the best choices for the children in their lives with disabilities...

LD & ADD Testing Chicago

LD/ADHD testing, tutoring, and neurofeedback in Chicago

Ads by Google

Autism & Speech

Unlock your child's potential for language & help kids learn to talk

Advertise on this site

Every toy on the AblePlay website features a rating seal that provides an at-a-glance understanding of a toy's appropriateness for children with physical, sensory, communicative and/or cognitive disabilities. Through the website, consumers can purchase toys online directly from manufacturers after reading the comprehensive AblePlay Product Reviews.

Developed by the National Lekotek Center, the leading nonprofit authority on play for children with disabilities, AblePlayTM will provide parents, and the professionals who work with them, access to the most useful, product-specific information about the top toys and learning products.

AblePlay's independent evaluators are experts with degrees in special education, early childhood education or related therapeutic specialties. The Website insists their toy reviews and detailed information help you get "beyond the box" to understand each toy's unique features, creative ways to use the toys and the skills that will be enhanced as a result. Happy shopping!

\(AblePlay.org\)

There are no comments for this article

Only registered users can write comments.
Please register or login.

Close Window